Backstory

Recently, you have had the good fortune of being privately funded to work in Egypt. After a long time with no notable findings, you have been granted only one more season of work, with an expectation that you produce results or else your funding will be pulled. The good news is that your current dig seems to be the answer to your prayers, as you have uncovered an ancient stone path leading into a cliff face. You and your companions could be on the verge of a big and career-making discovery!

- Traits: you have a passion and drive to succeed in your work, and you crave the fame that a big discovery would bring.
- Ideology/Beliefs: you're not sure you share the ancient Egyptians' belief in an afterlife.
- Meaningful Location: Egypt—where else? The scene of so many triumphs, but also so much disappointment.

Roleplaying books

If you don't find something this time, your career is pretty much over—so find something.

Possessions

Backstory

Years of studying Egyptian hieroglyphics at University College, London have surprisingly limited occupational opportunities despite the international renown of some of your former tutors. Consequently, you have spent most of your professional career translating Germanic documents (another language for which you have a natural flair). Now you have the chance to work on something really worthwhile. You have been summoned to Egypt to a new dig that promises to unearth some fabulous finds.

- Traits: eager to finally put your training to good use.
- Ideology/Beliefs: you believe in yourself—whatever life throws your way, you can handle it. Probably.
- Treasured Possessions: a signed copy of Ancient Egyptian Legends by your former tutor, Margaret Murray.

Roleplaying books

This dig is finally a chance to be part of a major discovery (which is always good for the career). Then, perhaps, people will employ you for your first love: hieroglyphics.

Backstory

You fought in Egypt during the Great War. You were dishonorably discharged from the Army due to an incident with an officer that ended in fisticuffs. But fighting is all you know and now you've gained the only employment you can muster—landing you straight back in Egypt, providing support at archaeological digs in the Valley of Kings. Despite the heat and the flies, the pay is good.

Word has reached you that the Archaeologist has found a tomb and your latest employer, the Dilettante, has arrived on site for the grand unveiling. You'd better look sharp and go see what's happening.

- Traits: frustrated by the blemish on your military record and fed up with being stuck in the desert.
- Ideology/beliefs: in the end, the only person you can rely on is yourself.
- Significant People: your former Army mates, although you haven't seen them in such a long time.

THE NECROPOLIS

Handout: Necropolis 1

7th August 1916:

Word has reached us of fierce fighting north, close to the Suez Canal. Our men are scared enough as it is without the fear of being killed in any crossfire. Their superstitious beliefs have delayed the dig more than once and I do not care for any further stoppages. We dig tirelessly through the loose sand and rock. We are close.

3rd September 1916:

Today was glorious! We have found the entrance. Removing the doorway was difficult but we created a pulley system that allowed us entry. More work greets us inside. Limestone chips have clogged the entirety of the tunnel. I've halted the removal of the stones until I have surveyed the structure and documented what we have learned thus far. Sutton thinks my meticulous records are unnecessary and time-consuming.

1st December 1916:

Finally, the tunnel is now almost clear. Some of the workers have taken a great interest in the damaged hieroglyphs in the passageway. Today we remove the last of the stone chips and explore. The stonework looks unstable. It may be too risky to use the explosives.

3rd December 1916:

Sutton is dead. The local labor attacked us and broke his neck when he refused to be forced inside the tomb. Beware the Children of the Sphinx! I plan on waiting a couple of hours in the hope they will have gone. I'll gather some of the jewelry and then make my escape. This place will not be my tomb. I can hear noises. Something else is here with me.

Backstory

You are an author, specializing in books about the occult, unexplained mysteries, and other strange phenomena. You are related to Arthur Blackwood through your maternal great-grandmother. Arthur has requested your assistance in proving his innocence; he said it was vital that you meet with his defense attorney, Joseph Klein, then go on to the family's cabin up near Whitehall once you'd heard what he had to say.

You were once close to Arthur, but you drifted apart some time ago, so this request is a little odd, even though it fascinates you immensely from both a personal and a professional standpoint. Still, if you can't look to your family in your hour of need, who can you turn to?

- Traits: curious by nature; intrigued by the mystery of who murdered Rose Blackwood.
- Ideology/beliefs: you don't believe Arthur could be capable of murdering Rose, no matter what anyone else says—he loved her far too much for that.
- Significant People: your grandmother, who used to tell you all sorts of fascinating stories when you were a child. It's probably down to her that you now do what you do.

Roleplaying books

You wish to clear Arthur Blackwood's name and work out who murdered Rose. If Arthur didn't do it, who did? And could there even be a book in it for you?

Backstory

You are a private detective, hired by the law office of Blackwood and Klein to assist in proving the innocence of one of the firm's partners: Arthur Blackwood. You are recognized by the court as having the authority to collect evidence from the cabin where Mrs. Rose Blackwood was murdered, so it may be used in Arthur's defense. Not that you're expecting to find much—after all, the police and the prosecution team have been all over the scene of the crime, so it's unlikely they'll have missed anything important. Still, there's no harm in looking, especially as there's a nice pay packet in it for you regardless of what you find.

- Traits: meticulous and professional.
- Ideology/beliefs: you wish you could believe that justice is blind, but you've been doing this job for far too long to fall for that one.
- Treasured possessions: your trusty .38 automatic pistol—it's got you out of many a jam in the past.

Backstory

You are a psychologist, hired by the law office of Blackwood and Klein to assist in proving the innocence of Arthur Blackwood in the small matter of the murder of his wife, Rose. Your expertise is required to ascertain Arthur Blackwood's mental state at the time of the murder; thus, in visiting the murder scene, you hope to build a better picture of Arthur and determine whether or not he's fit to take the stand at his upcoming trial.

- Traits: questioning and broad-minded.
- Ideology/beliefs: never take anyone at face value; after all, everyone has their secrets.

Grisly Whitehall Murder!

Prominent New York attorney, Arthur Blackwood, was arrested yesterday and charged with the murder of his wife, Rosemary. Mr. Blackwood was discovered wandering the countryside near his family vacation cabin, located in Whitehall, New York. It is reported that Mr. Blackwood was disorientated and covered in blood. On arrival, the local sheriff discovered evidence of the heinous murder of Mrs. Blackwood despite the disappearance of her body. When questioned about his wife's whereabouts, Mr. Blackwood was unable to respond.

Chamber to oppose
CHS closing proposal

The Chamber of Commerce Board of Directors Tuesday urged its members and other concerned citizens to oppose the proposed closing of Central High School by writing to members of the Select Committee on Higher Education.

According to Carlton Bennett, chamber president, closing CHS would affect the town financially. "Not only do we educate a lot of kids there," he said, "but it's become an important member of our business community and our industrial development."

The board passed a resolution opposing the closing. Bennett said the chamber will be asking other local entities to take similar action.

In other chamber news, the chamber welcomed 8 new businesses to its roll, including the Grand Theatre Command Performance, the County Republican Party, Hammerstone Life Insurance, The Jones Brick & Tile Palace, and Paradise Do-Nuts.

New DWI penalties reduce cases

The passage two years ago of a stiffer driving while intoxicated law appears to have reduced the numbers of that offense, according to the local county attorney and district attorney.

"I think it's brought it down some," District Attorney Howard Stills said, adding, "I hope it's because people aren't drinking and driving as much."

County Attorney Michael Hicks agrees: "We've seen a steady decline after implementing the new law."

With the new law, a person arrested for DWI faces misdemeanor charges for the first conviction. A third conviction increases the charge to a felony. Stills said, "It's more work, because people have to keep the records straight, but that is good. The new punishments stop people from accumulating five misdemeanors."

Hicks commented that if a person is charged with a felony DWI, he or she is likely a problem drinker-driver. "There is one side that says it is a sickness and should be treated, but a louder, stronger side who says, 'No, this guy is putting my life in danger and he has to be stopped,'"

Decide what gender your character is (or passes as). Whether their love for Gardiner is forbidden love due to your gender selection or simply unrequited love is up to you.*

Backstory

You live in Providence, Rhode Island, in Ma Shanks' Boarding House, a three-story building, where you run things on behalf of Ma Shanks, the elderly owner of the property.

You are widowed and now it's just you and your 11-year-old son Tommy, who you love very much. Because you lost your own spouse, you sympathize with Mrs. Madeira, who lives across the hall from another of your tenants, Mr. Gardiner. (Her husband was killed in an industrial accident last March.) You know all of the other tenants in the building to different degrees: the Bookstore Owner, the Business Associate, and the Nosy Neighbor (all player characters), as well as the Skirgaila family (Lithuanian brothers and sisters who are, for the most part, hard workers, with jobs in the city).

You wish to find love again, and perhaps you have. James Gardiner—Mrs. Madeira's neighbor—has lived in the boarding house for around two years. He has utterly captured your heart. True, he's not acted to reciprocate your love, but deep down, you know that, somehow, he loves you too. You are the only one in the boarding house that he spends time with, the only one that he talks to, even if your talks are rare. Should anything happen to your adored tenant you would rain down vengeance on that person. No one would escape your wrath if he were slighted or injured. You would do anything within your power to seek that person out for special punishment.

Strangely, James has not been seen for two days, although that's not unusual. He prefers to work and makes his own meals in his room. But, despite your knocking, there's been no answer at his door. You are getting concerned and some of the other tenants appear to want to talk to James, too. So, you have agreed to unlock the door to his room, to check he's okay.

- Traits: highly protective of those you care for; lonely and in search of love.
- Ideology/beliefs: everyone deserves a second chance.

Backstory

You live in Providence, Rhode Island, in Ma Shanks' Boarding House. The Depression has hit your bookstore business very hard. You may have to give up your dream of selling rare books, all because the flow of orders has dropped to a trickle. Only one order from a collector has come in this month, but it is a significant one—however, there is one small problem.

Your business affords you the opportunity to read through all sorts of arcane books, typically of an occult bent. While most of your business is conducted with clients around the world, you have a special place in your heart for the local customers. A year ago, Mr. Gardiner, who actually lives in the same boarding house as you, approached you to help make contact with an estate sale of books. The small fee you earned was appreciated and you were able to pick up a few old tomes as well. Apparently, Mr. Gardiner got what he wanted and for a very reasonable price; although he never talked about what book he might have purchased.

Mr. Gardiner seemed obsessed with dreams. You both have talked on the subject at length in your store. You wouldn't really call him a friend but certainly a colleague. When he asked to borrow a few books from your store, you were happy to make a short-term loan. Unfortunately, one of the books you loaned him is the one the collector wishes to purchase. All you need to do is get the book back from Mr. Gardiner.

Compounding the problem is the fact that you've seen neither hide nor hair of Mr. Gardiner for a week. You've asked if the other tenants in your boarding house have seen Gardiner but none of them have, so you've asked the landlord to check up on him—giving you the chance to enter his room and find the book. After all, if this sale goes through, your shop will be able to stay open for at least another six months.

You have loaned James Gardiner the following books:

- The Dreamer's Dictionary, a rare 1815 first edition—this is the book the collector wants to buy.
- Myths and Legends of Ancient Greece and Rome, by E.M. Berens.
- The Interpretation of Dreams, by Sigmund Freud.
- A Primer in Greek Vocabulary.

- Traits: afraid you are about to lose the business you've worked so hard to build, but determined to save it, come what may.
- Ideology/beliefs: from everything you've read over the years, you're pretty certain there's more to life than mankind is currently aware of.
- Meaningful locations: your beloved bookstore.

Backstory

You live in Providence, Rhode Island, in Ma Shanks' Boarding House.

We all make decisions for the best of reasons. Sometimes, those decisions have long-lasting and dangerous consequences. Moving grain and other supplies into the city for making bootleg spirits has been a very lucrative business. You don't worry about being busted, as you aren't actually handling illegal hooch. All you have to do is get the materials required to the basements around the city where the production work is done.

Recently, a small mishap in another business venture left you temporarily short on funds. You had to juggle a little money from the Mob's expenses to temporarily cover your other debts. Simple. But complications followed, and you found yourself having to skim more money just to keep afloat.

You've always been able to acquire things for people (antiques, rare goods, and less than legal items). Sometimes, this little sideline has proved profitable. About a year ago, James Gardiner, who lives in the same boarding house as you, asked you to make use of your talents to acquire a pair of obsidian knives. "No questions asked," has always been your motto. In exchange, you asked Gardiner to "fix" your accounting ledger by creating a false ledger—something to show the Mob if "Double Barrel" Angelo comes calling to ask awkward questions about the missing money.

Problem is, no one has seen Gardiner in days. He's not answering knocks at the door. You need your receipts and the two ledgers. Only last night you heard that Angelo has been asking questions and mentioning your name. You've pestered the boarding house's landlord to open Gardiner's door under the pretense of checking he is okay—giving you a chance to follow inside and hopefully get your ledgers.

- Traits: once full of self-confidence, now you feel as if you're always looking over your shoulder.
- Ideology/beliefs: the Law is an ass, and it's every man for himself.
- Significant people: "Double Barrel" Angelo—he gave you your start in this business and you kind of feel bad about skimming from him. Plus, you fear what he'll do to you if he ever finds out.

Backstory

You live in Providence, Rhode Island, in Ma Shanks' Boarding House. Your family is all grown up and moved away; your spouse died in the influenza epidemic twelve years ago. You know everyone in the house and make it your business to also know their business.

But James Gardiner, who lives on the third floor, is a mystery to you. Who is this man who thinks he can hide from you? Why is he so suspicious? Does he engage in illegal dealings? Is he up to no good in that room of his? He's lived here for nearly two years, but never once has he said more than a passing hello to you.

What you do know about Gardiner is that he hides in his room all of the time. Late at night, you've heard him reciting some odd-sounding poetry before going to bed. The poetry isn't in English and has had you wondering about what he's been doing in there.

But today, everyone seems to be talking about him. Apparently, no one has seen him for a few days and some are getting worried. Well, this sounds right up your street—time to put your detective hat on. The landlord is going to unlock his room to check on him; perhaps you can follow in and get a good look to see just what Gardiner has been up to.

What you know about the other tenants:

- The Landlord/Landlady (player character) and their 11-year-old son, Tommy: about the only person Gardiner seemed to bother with, apart from the Business Associate (although their friendship is a relatively recent thing).
- The Bookstore Owner (player character): owns a local bookstore of weird and old books.
- The Business Associate (player character): seems a shady one and never discusses exactly what line of work they're in.
- Ma Shanks: the frail and elderly building owner.
- Mrs. Madeira: lives across the hall from James Gardiner. Her husband died in an accident last March. She doesn't seem to like you.
- The Skirgaila family: Lithuanian brothers and sisters. Anikke, Dovana, and Konstantinas are hard workers, with jobs in the city. Petras, the other brother, just seems to hang around the room they share all day. Except today.
- Traits: some call you a nosy gossip, but you don't see it that way.
- Ideology/beliefs: a house is a community, so it's important to know everyone well.
- Treasured Possessions: your wedding ring and your spouse's cigarette lighter—it's about the only thing you have left of them (lately you've had to pawn the rest to help keep your head above water).
